Volume 56 of the Canes Nobiles Middle High German interlinear texts

The Middle High German text follows Ferdinand Vetter, Die Predigten Taulers aus der Engelberger und der Freiburger Handschrift sowie aus Schmidts Abschriften der ehemaligen Strassburger Handschriften, Deutsche Texte des Mittelalters 11 (Berlin: Weidmann, 1910), sermons 1, 5, 10, 11, 15, 19, 21, 24, 26, 27, 28, 37, 39, 40, 41, 47, 53, 55, 56, and 76

Translated and composed with AI, edited by Christopher Hench
Artwork by Esther Steves

The sermons are numbered as Vetter numbers them, and each opens with the heading and rubric his manuscripts give it, save the heading the manuscript sets over sermons 28 and 29 together. His spelling and diacritics are the manuscripts'. Vetter sets sermons 1 to 28 and 76 without paragraph breaks; there the paragraphs are this press's, as are the English heads.

For Christmas. The Church celebrates three births in three masses: the Father's eternal begetting of the Son, Christ's birth of the Virgin, and God's birth in the good soul every day. The soul learns the third from the first: as the Father turns into himself, knows himself, and goes out of himself, so the soul must gather all its powers inward and then go out of itself, renouncing all its own willing and working. What is emptied God must fill, as much going in as it goes out. Like Mary, it must be a pure maiden, betrothed, and enclosed in silence, for when God is to speak the soul must be still. Whatever is familiar to it hinders the birth, and the silence, kept often, must become a habit.

For Epiphany. God wants only one thing: to find the noble ground of the soul bare and ready for his work. The soul must rise up from itself and all creatures. Some people prepare the ground themselves with clever images, devotions, and rules, and keep their faults and a false peace; they must still labor to overcome them. Others let God prepare it: they give everything back to him, accept all things from his will, and find peace in unpeace; when a fault assails them they flee at once into God, who shines in them. Yet they must rise up without ceasing as long as they live, and even at the summit remain in humble fear and say, "Thy will be done."

10 · I AM THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD

Christ is the light of all the world, and every creature must flow back into its origin. Worldly hearts are hindered by creatures and the senses; spiritual-seeming Pharisees, full of self-love and judgment of others, stop at their natural light, whose pleasure is greater than the world's. The true way is to renounce oneself and bear all God's gifts back to him. In suffering, God's friends flee to him; the false run for counsel and despair, a thousand times more endangered than worldly sinners. The Father gave his Son, a lesser sun tempered by his manhood, and the sacraments to lead us home. Only the poor in spirit receive this light, so the hearers must strive, pray, and cling to God's friends.

Ego sum lux mundi dicit dominus.

11 · IF ANYONE THIRSTS

Christ calls whoever thirsts to come and drink. The Holy Ghost kindles a love-thirst in beginners, the progressing, and the perfect. As a hart is driven by hounds to thirst for water, the beginner is hunted by temptations: the great hounds are killed at the tree of the cross, but the little ones, companionship and trinkets, tear him unnoticed. God refreshes the hunted with sweetness, and some grow drunk on it until he sobers them like children. All this is still in the lowest powers; God dwells only in the highest, where the spirit is drawn into a wayless desert and drinks from the source itself. The lowest powers must not lie idle, or spiritual pride is born. God thirsts for our thirst, and the drink flows out to order the whole life.

Si quis sitit, veniat et bibat.
If anyone thirsts let-him-come and drink

15 · GLORIFY THY SON

When Christ raised his eyes and prayed, he taught us to lift every power to God, for prayer is the ascent of the mind into him. Outward prayer is as a small coin beside the wayless prayer of true union, where the created spirit sinks into the uncreated and all works since Adam are fulfilled. Yet it is better to come there by ways, and Christ drew Saint John in three: from the world, to rest on his heart, and at Pentecost into the Spirit. The person must order his powers, words, and thoughts and study Christ's image, which no one passes. Yet John fled, dropping his mantle: these ways are not to be owned, and God must work without image or form. Many deaths fall on nature first; it is not the work of a day or a year.

For the Ascension. Christ led captivity captive, and five captivities hold people. The first is love of creatures, most perilous in the devout who are content in it. The second is self-love, which seeks its own even in God. The third is reason, which flutters over teaching and doctrine without living it. The fourth is spiritual sweetness, enjoyed for its own sake. The fifth is self-will, even in divine things. As the disciples waited forty days and then ten more for the Holy Ghost, a person finds true peace only at forty and must wait ten years more, to fifty, before the Holy Ghost comes; then the spark flows back into its origin, all debt is paid, and such people are the pillars of the Church.

21 · WITNESSES IN PEACE AND UNPEACE

For the Ascension. Christ's members must follow their head and take no comfort in this world. We are to be his witnesses in Jerusalem, the city of peace and unpeace, finding peace in unpeace and joy in sorrow, as the apostles did. Many would gladly be God's witnesses while things go their way, but fall away in darkness. Judea means confessing and praising God: we confess and thank him in all things, leaning on no feeling or practice of our own, for God breaks every support. Samaria means union: the spirit loses itself in the divine abyss, then looks back to its lowest practice, so that the person hangs between heaven and earth, highest powers in God and lowest in humility, an essential witness on a way that cannot go astray.

Die vierde uzlegunge von der uffart leret uns sůchen friden

Saint Peter bids us be wise and watch in prayer. As a farmer prunes his trees and weeds his field when the March sun draws near, the person must dig up his ground and root out the seven deadly sins. Then the divine sun shines in and May blossoms; some, tasting this sweetness, lie down in it like Peter on the mount, and nature takes its rest there. Sweetness is to be used, not enjoyed, and borne back to God with thanks, spurring more love and work than before. True prayer is the mind's ascent into the hidden abyss, from which the perfect go out to all the Church's needs.

For Pentecost. The disciples were filled with the Holy Ghost because they were gathered, enclosed, and sitting still. He comes the moment the person turns from creatures to God, and flees when he turns back; the person must shut himself in against the harmful "Jews" of company and pastime. The seven gifts lead step by step: fear, mildness, and knowledge prepare; strength makes martyrs; counsel teaches detachment when God takes back all he gave, even to bearing hell in his will, and whoever stands there has set one foot in eternal life, and God can never leave him; understanding and wisdom lead the spirit into the divine abyss, where it loses itself and God works in it.

27 · THE DOOR OF THE SHEEPFOLD

For Pentecost. Christ is the door of the sheepfold, which is the Father's heart; the shepherd is the eternal Word, the doorkeeper the Holy Ghost, who opens the house to all who turn inward. God calls ceaselessly, and like Queen Vashti we refuse him. The own sheep seek nothing of their own and follow the shepherd; those who climb in elsewhere stand on their own natural cleverness. The thief within is the hidden appropriation that claims God's gifts; the murderer is judgment of one's neighbor. If the murderer turns inward and kills the thief, and both die, the soul enters and finds full pasture.

Dixit Jhesus discipulis suis: qui non intrat per hostium.
Said Jesus to-disciples his who not enters through the-door

For Trinity Sunday. No words can speak of the Trinity, and the unlearned should leave its disputing to the clerics. Christ is the witness of two ways, like and unlike, which must run together: joy in sorrow and sweetness in bitterness. The unlike is the more fruitful, the fruit of which the like is the blossom. Temptations are to be welcomed: a pure person may feel sin more vividly than a gross sinner, yet suffers it for God and goes to eternal life, while the sinner falls without temptation. The angels who saw their unlikeness sank into likeness, while Lucifer fell. The purified spirit leaps into the divine abyss, where like and unlike are lost in God's unity; to come there one must die to every creature and to oneself.

The person must be a gentle sheep, sheared by hard words in silence and carried by the Lord into the Godhead; that makes him good, but to be noble he has far to climb. The woman who lost a penny is the Godhead, her lamp the deified manhood, the penny the soul, which must have weight, golden matter, coinage, and image. Love is not delight but a burning in lack. Seeking is outward, in virtues, and inward, in the ground, where God turns the house over; the sticky are swept with a hard broom, the smooth with a feather. The penny's image is God's own: in union the soul becomes by grace what God is by nature, while a soul colored by creatures is the devil's likeness.

39 · OF ONE MIND IN PRAYER

Saint Peter bids us be of one mind in prayer. Prayer is the mind's ascent into God, with the back turned on all things not divine; outward prayer serves it as many workers serve a cathedral's building. As the Father works and enjoys in one, every creature works like him. The Church is a mystical body in which the good I love in another member is mine. There are three degrees: jubilation over God's gifts; a dark bereavement in which God takes everything back; and a crossing into a God-formed being, deified by grace. That is the deepest humility, and to claim it as one's own would be Lucifer's fall; this union is the one mind Peter meant.

For the feast of John the Baptist. John means "in whom grace is," and grace is born only where the person looks down into his own naught. Zacharias, the high priest who went alone into the Holy of Holies, is the inward person who offers the Son to the Father for all, an office a woman may do spiritually as well as a man. God speaks there in a mist of kindled virtues, and the angel announces the birth; but rational people who possess their natural light as God are lost. Those born in the highest way drink no wine: led through a dark, comfortless pressure, they make the essential turn, which God answers with himself, and on them the Church stands.

Christ bade Peter lead his ship out into the deep. The ship is the mind, which must be lifted above all creatures on the world's raging sea. The net is the memory, cast out in meditation on Christ's life. In the deep, all images and sweetness fall away, and old temptations strike the ship like a storm; the person must stay anchored and wait, for after darkness comes light. The essential turn brings a peace no creature can unsettle. At last the net tears, as the nature breaks under God's outpouring: the created abyss calls the uncreated, and they become one, and the person comes back kind and gracious to all.

Saint Paul says that if we live in the Spirit, we must also walk in the Spirit, and there are three ways of walking. The first is outward, with ourselves and our neighbor: without vain honor, quarreling, anger, or hatred, rebuking gently and bearing one another's burdens. The second follows Christ's image and footsteps, offering his likeness to the Father for our unlikeness, seeking no sweetness, and laying sleep, food, and psalms into his cross and wounds. The third is imageless, a dark, narrow way between knowing and unknowing, passed in faith, hope, detachment, and humility through a distress some flee to Rome, until God suddenly shows the hidden truth; then the person must sink deeper still in humility.

Saint Paul begs us to walk worthily in our calling. The Father calls us, with all he is, back to our origin and to his Son, by inward admonitions and outward joys and sorrows. Some are called to the lowest degree, keeping the commandments; some to the counsels, kept in the religious orders; some to the highest, following Christ's image inwardly and outwardly. Many in the world follow their calling better than spiritual people, so each must find his own. The perfect go inward in stillness and, like Esther before the king, sink away and are raised by God; when the enemy tempts them to spiritual pride, a small fault God permits sinks them deeper, and there peace is born.

55 · FOLLOW ME

Christ said to Matthew, once a great sinner, "Follow me," and he left everything. Following means leaving all that is not God, by humility, gentleness, and patience in the lower powers and by faith, confidence, and love in the higher. Pleasure in good works must be burned in love's fire like the fat of the sacrifices. Tauler would give up his order, habit, and priesthood if the pope and the Church took them. Some must go a dark, unknown way where every form is lost, as a child's first forms pass when its soul is given; the way is blissful and very dangerous, and runs only through Christ, the door. Those who go it are under no law and live in essential peace, but they are very few.

Sequere me! at ille relictis omnibus secutus est eum.

Saint Paul bids us be renewed in the spirit of our mind, putting away lying, anger, and stealing. Spiritual people with worldly hearts lie, and so do those whose good works serve themselves. Anger must strike only at what is against God, without bitterness; stealing is taking honors and alms not one's own. The spirit is called soul, spirit, and mind, whose ground holds the Trinity's image. In this mind the spirit sinks into God at night, is renewed in a moment, and by day works in peace. Such people are martyred by those who seem holy and must bear it; our own justice is naught, and renewal is only in him.

Renovamini spiritu mentis vestre.

Saint Paul prays that our love may overflow in knowledge. God asks only for love, the bond of all perfection, which alone divides the false from the good. Love of God is known by love of one's neighbor, bearing his faults with patience and judging oneself instead. The loving person falls into God's will, even in purgatory, and would give his reward to a heathen and God's gifts to his worst enemy. Above this sweet love is a higher one, a dark lacking above reason, where nature is weaned of every comfort and God loves himself; there Christ is no longer touched in images, as with Magdalene, and his light shines out from within.
